From: Dan COLLINS <vermontaigne@gmail.com>

me: howdy

me: would you be interested in a blog debate over the Catholic Church matter?

me: specifically, regarding the points you made today regarding the media's coverage of the church over public schools?

me: I've been attacked on this a couple of times recently but both people were idiotic me: second one accused me of being a racist because I am fair-skinned and blondish me: thought perhaps a debate with you might be more productive me: anyway, let me know when you get a moment, por favor

Dan: Have you got the relevant data?

me: regarding public schools?

Dan: Yeah.

me: I haven't looked it into it yet to that exist, but I would imagine I can find whatever exists

me: of course

me: I believe part of your argument regards the fact that the msm hasn't gone about looking into that to the extent that it has the church, correct?

Dan: All I am asking for is a reasonable statistical comparison. Do you think that's a bad idea?

me: not at all

me: it's obviously of great relevance me: I'll take a look and see what I can find

Dan: Then I'm not sure what we would debate about, Barrett.

me: sorry?

Dan: If it exists, before I debate anything, I'll try to figure out what it means.

me: Well, I'll look and see what I can find on stats regarding public schools and child molestation and get back to you and perhaps we can come to an agreement on something. Hope all is well.

Dan: Thanks, Barrett.
